In this paper, we introduce the concept of dynamically changing between centralized, replicated, and hybrid collaboration architectures. It is implemented by providing users a function that dynamically changes the mapping between user-interface and program components. We decompose the function into more primitive commands that are executed autonomously by individual users. These commands require a mechanism to dynamically replicate user-interface and program components on a user's site. We pr ...

Autonomy and inter- operability are two characteristics of software agents that are advocating agent technology as an ideal candidate to support next generation of software systems. This paper presents a Java development toolkit supporting the realization of autonomous and inter- operable agents. This toolkit provides the developer with a goal-oriented agent architecture for FIPACompliant agents. Goal- orientation supports autonomy because the developer is no longer requested to describe w ...

This paper gives an overview of the natural language problems addressed in the Traffic Information Collator/Condenser (TICC) project, and describes in some detail the "interesting-corner parser" used in the TICC's Natural Language Summariser. The TICC is designed to take free text input describing local traffic incidents, and automatically output local traffic information broadcasts for motorists in appropriate geographical areas. The "interesting-corner parser" uses both syntactic and semantic ...

Human-computer interface management, from a computer science viewpoint, focuses on the process of developing quality human-computer interfaces, including their representation, design, implementation, execution, evaluation, and maintenance. This survey presents important concepts of interface management: dialogue independence, structural modeling, representation, interactive tools, rapid prototyping, development methodologies, and control structures. Dialogue independence is th ...

Current research on Machine Learning encompasses a diverse set of approaches, and of opinions regarding where the important issues lie. The significant increase of interest and research activity in Machine Learning over the past few years has led us to organize this special issue of SIGART, whose purpose is to provide a snapshot of current research in this field. This issue contains a set of summaries of ongoing research, solicited from the community at large, and received from thirty-five resea ...

An incremental computation is one that is performed repeatedly on nearly identical inputs. Incremental computations occur naturally in many environments, such as compilers, language-based editors, spreadsheets, and formatters. This article describes a proposed tool for making it easy to write incremental programs. The tool consists of a programming language, INC, and a set of compile-time transformations for the primitive elements of INC. A programmer defines an algorithm in INC without reg ...

This paper provides an overview of the WarpIV Simulation Kernel that was designed to be an initial implementation of the Standard Simulation Architecture (SSA). WarpIV is the next generation replacement for the Synchronous Parallel Environment for Emulation and Discrete Event Simulation (SPEEDES) framework that has supported a number of DoD simulation programs including MDWAR, EADTB, JSIMS, and others. This paper first provides a look back at the historical evolution of SPEEDES, the evolution of ...

We present software tools that support robust input processing and comprehensive testing in Java. The software includes the JPT library that supports error-checked typed input via console or GUI for all primitive types. This provides a robust encapsulation of typical interactive input requests encountered in introductory programming courses. The Java Power Framework and its extension allow the user to develop a comprehensive test suite independent of the target classes. The type-safe input framew ...

Breck Baldwin and Jeff Reynar informally began the University of Pennsylvania's MUC-6 coreference effort in January of 1995. For the first few months, tools were built and the system was extended at weekly 'hack sessions.' As more people began attending these meetings and contributing to the project, it grew to include eight graduate students. While the effort was still informal, Mark Wasson, from Lexis-Nexis, became an advisor to the project. In July, the students proposed to the faculty that w ...

The capabilities of Virtual Reality Modeling Language (VRML)/Extensible 3D (X3D) permit building collaborative virtual environments (CVE) using the Internet and the World Wide Web. This paper describes the emulation of an unconventional model of computation inspired by the field of optical computing. Our development employed a combination of eXtreme Programming, unit and integration testing with junit, and design patterns. In the final product we implemented a novel content-routing message passing system and have realised the first debugger for an optical computer programming language.

Large-scale attacks, such as those launched by worms and zombie farms, pose a serious threat to our network-centric society. Existing approaches such as software patches are simply unable to cope with the volume and speed with which new vulnerabilities are being discovered. In this paper, we develop a new approach that can provide effective protection against a vast majority of these attacks that exploit memory errors in C/C++ programs. Our approach, called COVERS, uses a forensic analysis of a ...

Internet-based e-services require application developers to deal explicitly with failures of the underlying software components, for example web servers, servlets, browser sessions, and so forth. This complicates application programming, and may expose failures to end users. This paper presents a framework for an application-independent infrastructure that provides recovery guarantees and masks almost all system failures, thus relieving the application programmer from having to deal with these f ...

Discourse comprises those phenomena that usually do not arise when processing a single sentence. It appears to be the most difficult and probably the least understood aspect of automated message understanding. Five out of fifteen sites on a MUC-3 survey listed discourse as their main weakness and an area in which to concentrate future research. Virtually all systems presented here take a sentence-by-sentence approach to text understanding. Parsing and domain-dependent interpretation of sentences ...

We present a new tool, named DART, for automatically testing software that combines three main techniques: (1) automated extraction of the interface of a program with its external environment using static source-code parsing; (2) automatic generation of a test driver for this interface that performs random testing to simulate the most general environment the program can operate in; and (3) dynamic analysis of how the program behaves under random testing and automatic generation of ...

The Block Sorting process of Burrows and Wheeler can be applied to any sequence in which symbols are (or might be) conditioned upon each other. In particular, it is possible to parse text into a stream of words, and then employ block sorting to identify and so exploit any conditioning relationships between words. In this paper we build upon the previous work of two of the authors, describing several further recency rank transformations, and considering also the role of the entropy coder. By comb ...

Appointment scheduling is a problem faced daily by many individuals and organizations. Cooperating agent systems have been developed to partially automate this task. In order to extend the circle of participants as far as possible we advocate the use of natural language transmitted by email. We present a methodology for summarization of news about current events in the form of briefings that include appropriate background (historical) information. The system that we developed, SUMMONS, uses the output of systems developed for the DARPA Message Understanding Conferences to generate summaries of multiple documents on the same or related events, presenting similarities and differences, contradictions, and generalizations among sources of information. Multidatabase systems enable organizations to integrate legacy database systems, and their applications, with newer database technology. One such legacy system is IBM'S Information Management System (IMS), a hierarchical database management system developed in the 1960s. Commercial IMS gateways typically suffer from poor performance and lack essential features needed to support updates. In this paper, we outline the engineering issues of constructing a multi-user IMS gateway that supports both c ...

Distributed cooperative applications (e.g., e-commerce) are now increasingly being designed as a set of autonomous entities, named agents, which interact and coordinate (thus named a multi-agent system). Such applications are often very dynamic: new agents can join or leave, they can change roles, strategies, etc. This high dynamism creates new challenges to the traditional approaches of fault-tolerance. As relative importance of agents may evolve during the course of computation and problem sol ...

Informal specifications of protocols are often imprecise and incomplete and are usually not sufficient to ensure the correctness of even very simple protocols. Consequently, formal specification methods, such as finite-state models, are increasingly being used. The selection/resolution (S/R) model is a finite-state model with a powerful communication mechanism that makes it easy to describe complex protocols as a collection of simple finite-state machines. A software environment, called SPA ...

An active data model is one that not only stores data, but also acts upon changes to the data in ways that reflect application domain semantics. This paper introduces an active object-oriented model based on incremental attribute evaluation (one-way constraints) and discusses how it can be used to support a number of tasks in a User Interface Management System. It is shown how this model can provide unified support for lexical, syntactic, and semantic feedback, how the model supports the sp ...
